

DR. CHRISTINE J. QUINN

Christine J. Quinn is a coach, facilitator, and speaker who engages in leadership development for higher education professionals and teams. In her own words, “Nothing lights me up more than seeing the fruits of our collaboration transform universities and colleges into healthy, thriving, organizations.

Christine has been through the best and the worst of times in higher education and knows the impact of authenticity and collaboration.

Early in her career, Christine experienced the same frustrations that today’s leaders face. Like many of them, her vision and ambitious pursuits were knocked down time and time again by imposter syndrome-like symptoms of self-doubt, confusion about workplace politics and overworking to a fault. She questioned why the big dream of meaningful change in her leadership functions was so hard to do.

This began to affect her personal life and eventually, her health. Work-life balance was non-existent until a series of health challenges forced Christine to pause and re-evaluate her choices. Unable to work, she reconnected with her inner purpose and refocused her energy to launch her own business. This transformation led her to a life that she now loves. These days, Christine uses her experience and expertise to co-create strategies that activate transformative success and ignite people with passion and purpose.

Having overcome all that, she’s been through in life and at work Christine is the full package coach, consultant and facilitator who works with aspiring, current and future leaders in higher education. Unique to Christine’s empathetic style, she helps her clients rediscover their purpose, both in life and at work while holding a safe space for them to flourish, realize their fullest potential and transform into authentic leaders who achieve, engage and inspire.

Christine is a tenacious and resilient woman who uses all her successes and setbacks to improve and transform her own life and the life of others. She is a first-generation college graduate, a single mother of three, and harnesses her 25+ years of university leadership experience to serve others.

When she is not immersed in the journey of her clients, Christine is looking for opportunities to grow and learn. She is also passionate about her family and spends time traveling with her husband, adult children and camping with her grandchildren and the beloved family dog Koda. She enjoys the outdoors, especially hiking and kayaking and spends time staying connected to the Earth through her passion for pottery.
